LUMBER PRODUCERS HAIL U.S. DECISION TO RETURN DUTIES; DECLARE SOFTWOOD VICTORY COMPLETE

Voice Support for Consultative Process That Could Increase Understanding, Lessen Chances for Further Litigation

WASHINGTON, D.C. -- Canada's lumber industry today hailed the announcement that all remaining duties collected on Canadian softwood exports to the U.S. during the recent binational lumber dispute will be returned.

"Since the day we won this case in August, our number one priority has been to ensure the return of all the duties," said Mr. Tom Buell, chairman of the Canadian Forest Industries Council. "Today, we have achieved this goal."

Mr. Buell said that the U.S. government had already returned some of the duties, and today's announcement by the American government confirms that the U.S. will return the remaining duties estimated to be about (Canadian) $600 million.

Last August, a challenge panel convened under the U.S.-Canadian Free Trade Agreement (FTA) ruled in Canada's favor by upholding a binational review panel decision finding that Canada does not subsidize its softwood lumber exports to the U.S.

"As a result of this ruling, the U.S. was obligated to return the collected duties to us," Mr. Buell said. "We are pleased that the money will be released and this long-standing case, which never should have started, is now truly ended."

Mr. Buell also welcomed the decision by the Canadian and American governments to create a "consultative process" under which both nations, and interested parties, will move beyond the lumber case that just ended and address a range of forestry resource issues.

"We have maintained for a long time that there has got to be a better way to address our differences than through costly litigation," Mr. Buell said, noting that the recent case was the third lumber case since 1983.

"The U.S. and Canada have different approaches to the ownership, management, and pricing of their timber resources. The Canadian lumber industry firmly believes that Canada's system is just as good, and in many respects superior to, the one used in the United States," Mr. Buell said. "The consultative process offers both nations and our industries a chance to get beyond rhetoric and understand the reality of our marketplace. It is bound to be an improvement over the legal warfare in which we have been engaged for the past decade."

Mr. Buell noted that the process established by the two nations is open-ended, has no predetermined outcome, and is designed to give the North American lumber community and the two national governments a chance to explore, and gain a better understanding of, a variety of forestry matters.

"We have long supported the notion of an initiative that will allow all of us to foster a dialogue and head off protracted litigation before it has a chance to begin," Mr. Buell said.

In addition, Mr. Buell said he was pleased that a coalition of several American lumber producers have agreed to drop their Constitutional challenge to the binational dispute settlement mechanism under which the lumber case was resolved.

STATEMENT BY MR. JOHN KERR
Co-Chairman, Canadian Forest Industries Council

I am pleased to be here as a representative of the Canadian Forest Industries Council and as one who has been involved in the forest products industry for 25 years, including 15 years on trade issues. The Canadian Forest Industries Council is an association representing all of the forest products industry from British Columbia to Ontario. I am also speaking on behalf of the Quebec lumber industry. The industry in the Maritime provinces is represented by my colleagues here.

We are meeting here today to share views on issues of critical concern for our two industries and governments:

- the economic role of the lumber industry in North America;
- the global outlook for lumber; and
- projections for North American supply and demand.

These are areas where our industries have shared interests. These consultations should explore them in detail and lay the foundation for a productive future for the North American industry.

We believe it is important that participants focus on the central goal of these consultations: namely to encourage a bilateral dialogue aimed at creating a better understanding, resolving problems and seeking to avoid litigation. If there is anything we can all agree on, it is that the massive litigation effort of the last 12 years has been an unproductive use of scarce time and valuable resources, and has produced no long-term solutions.

The Canadian industry has entered this consultative process with an open mind, and in the spirit of developing a useful dialogue. We recognize that there are differences between Canadian and U.S. forestry management systems. Understanding these differences will hopefully avoid the sterile debate that has too often marred our relationship on trade in softwood lumber in the past.

We must note, however, that we are concerned about statements made in the United States over the last several months regarding the purpose of these consultations. These statements have been made by some elements of the U.S. lumber industry, certain Members of Congress and even members of the Clinton Administration. It appears that their purpose is to elicit from the Consultative Process a predetermined outcome requiring Canada to change its stumpage system to mirror the U.S. system.

Clearly, these assertions run contrary to the open dialogue agreed to in the "Elements of a Consultative Process" document, approved by both countries last fall. From our vantage point, there appears to be a great misunderstanding about the way in which the timber and lumber markets operate and about the underlying economic realities at work in these markets. We are two different countries, with two different systems. Neither system is perfect -- no one system is. But that does not mean that Canada should change its system to suit any other jurisdiction, or vice versa. While some in the U.S. have suggested otherwise, our system is market based.

We are fully prepared to discuss our system and we expect the United States to be fully prepared to discuss the history, development and economic realities of its system, including the market distortions which we believe arise from endless trade litigation. Every issue must be on the table for discussion.

These consultations provide a forum to educate all of us, and to set the record straight on misconceptions. We believe that a spirit of understanding and good will should prevail, and that substantive progress is both sustainable and essential.

Thank you.
